Editorial Review

About the Author

During the thirty-five years Katherine Ashe spent researching and writing her series on Simon de Montfort, the thirteenth-century founder of Parliament, she supported the project by writing several plays on historical subjects. In 1997 the New York City Historic House Trust commissioned her to write a monologue play for the Poe Cottage in the Bronx. Immersing herself in all of Poe's writings, along with letters and biographies, she says she felt "encumbered like a bee so laden with pollen that it couldn't fly." She had no idea what to write until one morning she woke and knew the writing would come now. Sixteen hours later she left her computer with no idea of the passage of time or even if what she had written was coherent. Except for the removal of a few notes that served as stage directions, this text is exactly what was written then.
